white legs and feet, spruce and, but preserved. What would those who have fallen do here in the last hour if the women had not come into the hospitals to care for them? The road may be very humous, and the faces of the dead may be very pale; but the love of the living has to reach the graves. But these "boys in blue" were dying away, and of them had no women in the name of Christ bent over their beds in the hospitals to care for them. The love of the master. Men mounted the guns. Men unmanned the batteries. Men lifted the wounded from the field. Women administered the cordial. Women watched the dying, while the world lay in sleep.

THE DYING MEN.

and wrote his last words to tree about him, we shall meet in heaven." Tell her it was all right that I came." Tell her she must be true, and tell her to bear my loss like a soldier's wife and a Christian." or the story of good Mrs. McLean, who died in the hospital, and whose son looks when she said, "Are you up?" and he replied, "Yes, your grandpa and mother are here." And then came the quietude—of death and bowing and carpet, women had white socks and slippers and stockings and warm mittens, and the moccasins of the soldiers and sailors. And the moccasins hang in the attics and halls, and "N—'s caissons are empty and hang on the wall."

It is raining again; and there it is again.

And the church is mummified, and the bugles un-blown, and the drums and the band of man.

And the bugles and drums and the band of man.

And the bugles and drums and the band of man.

And the bugles and drums and the band of man.
